

‘Raising Arizona’ next for Tuesday Night Movies’

Holly Hunter and Nicholas Cage star in the Coen Brothers' 1987 screwball comedy "Raising Arizona" at 7:30 p.m., Tuesday, March 28 at Woodmere Art Museum. Career criminal Cage tries to go straight for the love of police officer Hunter, but naturally everything goes wrong. A $5 contribution is recommended.

Chestnut Hill Conservancy re-accredited as premier urban land trust

by Pete Mazzaccaro

Chestnut Hill Conservancy's place as a premier land trust was reaffirmed last month by the Land Trust Accreditation Commission, an independent commission of the national Land Trust Alliance.

The CHC (formerly the Chestnut Hill Historical Society) is one of 372 accredited trusts in the country but is the first urban land trust to be receive accreditation. It has been directly responsible for the preservation of more than 130 acres of open space in the Chestnut Hill area since 1990. Every preserved acre is in the Wissahickon Watershed.

"Our national LTAC accreditation is a catalyst for the Chestnut Hill Conservancy becoming a center for ideas on balancing growth and preservation to sustain the vibrant, historic urban village character of Chestnut Hill," said CHC's Executive Director Lori Salganicoff. "The LTAC accreditation renewal confirms that we are fulfilling our mission to advance integrated preservation and conservation efforts, collaboratively protecting and educating about the open space, watershed and built environment."

Salganicoff's counterpart at the Friends of the Wissahickon, Executive Director Maura McCarthy, said the accreditation was a sign that the land entrusted to the CHC was in good hands.

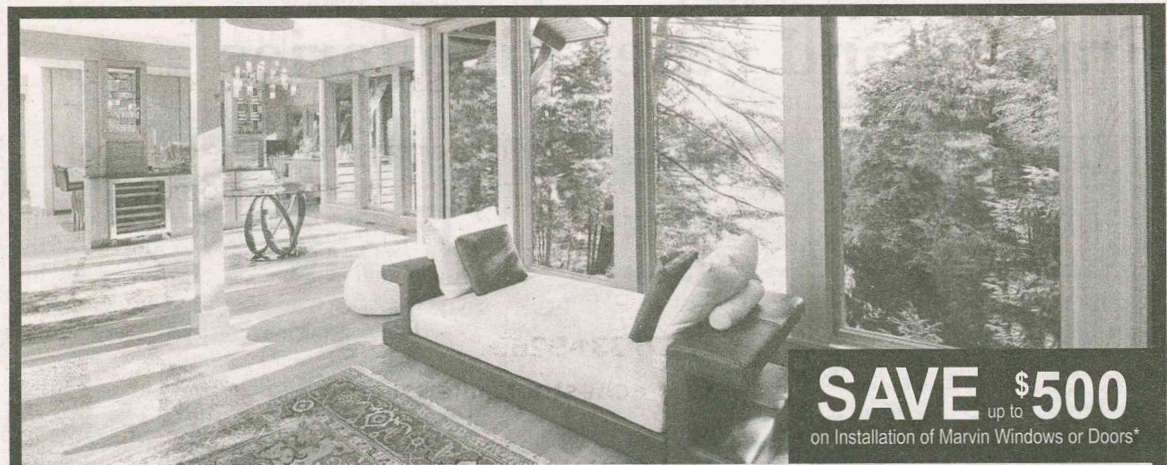

"The risks to open space change from year to year and decade to decade," McCarthy said. "A con-
