

Krisheim | 700 block McCallum St. | Peabody and Stearns, Olmsted Brothers | 1910-12. This was the home of Gertrude Woodward (Henry Houston's daughter) and her husband, Dr. George Woodward. Together they succeeded Houston as the major developer of Chestnut Hill in the first half of the 20th century. First a single-family home, then an institution, then split into apartments, Krisheim is now being returned to its original use by the Woodward family. Krisheim was designed by Peabody and Stearns, one of the premier architectural firms in the U.S. The landscaping by the prominent Olmsted Brothers firm was initiated 10 years before the building was completed.
