

The Vanna Venturi House was built in 1963, an early project of the internationally-known architectural theorist Robert Venturi for his mother. Also known as "Mother's House," it broke with many of the standard elements of modern architecture. Deemed one of "Ten Buildings That Shaped America," the building was added to the Philadelphia Register of Historic Places by the Conservancy in 2016.